STEAM GUAGES and WATER GLASSES At CHARLES BARRETT'S

DISUNION.—The British Colonist, of the 31st of December after the usual unanimous praise of the Confederates and deprecation of the Unionists uses the following language in regard to the probable effect of the Emancipation Proclamation if it is adhered to and the probable obstacles which may be interposed to prevent its execution

The world has never seen such a stupendous revolution before Nor no people have more self sacrificingly devoted themselves to the support of their respective causes than the North and South Yet outside of the Free States the world regards the conquest of the South as utterly hopeless, perfectly impossible There remains in our opinion, but one chance of Federal success—emancipation If the slaves combined with Northern endurance throughout a war for the next three or five years So long as the Helots of the Cotton States grow supplies to feed the Spartan bands they send to the war, so long will the South maintain itself against the whole power of the North It is the proclamation of emancipation—if some political compromise should not intervene—that the future success of the North lies The edict will fall harmless on the South on the 1st of January For a long time it will be inoperative generally But if the North can keep up an active warfare and at the same time, year by year, spirit away the slaves, in time they will undermine the whole foundation of Southern society and Southern support Next year the Southern army will not feel sensibly the loss of their slaves who may escape They have enough supplies on hand Let the emancipation go on, and the second year the diminution of the crops will be felt The third year short supplies from slave labor will be more pinching, felt, and in the fourth and fifth years emancipation may be complete—the slaves may be placed beyond the reach of Southern slave-owners and the conscripts of Lee, Jackson, and Bragg may beat their swords into ploughshares to provide food for themselves and their families

In such an extremity as the latter, the Union would be preserved But many causes may intervene to make such a programme a delusion A divided North, a Northern peace party, Democratic politicians may sweep the country at the next elections, or at the next Presidential election and when inaugurated in the White House and in the Capitol, may send the olive branch of peace to the South, may stop the flow of blood, may acknowledge the sovereignty of the Confederate States of America Confederate success in the field encouraged by foreign recognition may strike a blow that may make the North reel and rock and topple over rendering it impossible to take the field again But let the North keep the South at bay as well as it has done so far, let it keep up its armaments, its expeditions, and at the same time hold places of refuge for the slaves and the conquest of the South would seem to be but a matter of time

THE AGE OF OUR EARTH.—Among the astounding discoveries of modern science is that of the immense periods that have passed in the gradual formation of the earth So vast were the cycles of the time preceding even the appearance of man on the surface of our ball, that our own period seems as yesterday when compared with the epochs that have gone before it. Had we only the evidence of the deposits of rocks heaped above each other in regular strata by the slow accumulation of materials, they alone would convince us of the long and slow maturing of God's work on earth; but when we add to these the successive populations of whose life this world has been the theatre, and whose remains are hidden in the rocks into which the mud or sand or soil of whatever kind on which they lived has hardened in the course of time—or the enormous chains of mountains whose upheaval divided these periods of quiet accumulation by great convulsions—or the changes of a different nature in the configuration of our globe, as the sinking of lands beneath the ocean, or the gradual rising of continents and islands above it, or the slow growth of the coral reefs, those wonderful sea walks, raised by the little ocean architects, whose own bodies furnish both the building stones and cement that binds them together, and who have worked so busily during the long centuries, that there are extensive countries, mountain chains, islands, and long lines of coast consisting solely of their remains—or the countless forests that have grown up, flourished, died and decayed, to fill the storehouses of coal that feed the fires of the human race—if we consider all these

SATURDAY MORNING JAN 10 186

The Importance of Increased Production to the Willamette

Never since the palmy days of 1849, have the prospects of the agriculturists of Oregon been so bright as now And the producers of staple articles of food are not alone on the high road to prosperity The stock raiser mill owner, merchant and steamboat man are alike benefitted by the prospect of a market in the new mines of Oregon and Washington and the increased demand for transportation on the Columbia and Willamette rivers The produce of our gold fields will probably reach seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars next year of which the farmers of the Upper Columbia will absorb a large portion, in proportion to the amount they will produce, but with their best endeavors there will be a large deficiency which will come from Oregon, if the people of this country do not allow the farmers of California to ship their products past them to the mines It is a fact that during the floods of last winter San Francisco was commercially nearer to Dalles the great distributing point for the mine than any part of the Willamette above Oregon City But, learning wisdom by the past the farmers of Oregon should have their produce convenient to the shipping points in future so that the difficulty of hauling long distances over bad roads, during the rainy season, may be obviated, and produce may be easily shipped when the rise in the rivers will admit of it

It is plain to all that there is a portion of the year when produce may be economically shipped, and it is at this season that every perishable article should be sent to market The neglect of this lesson, which experience should have taught us two years ago, caused a heavy loss last winter Much of the crop of the preceding year was stored on the banks of the Willamette when the unforseen rise in the rivers swept it away, ware-houses and all These very articles should have been sold a year before.

It is advisable for farmers to entrust the sale of their superior staple products, such as grain, flour, &c, to well established houses in the city. By this mode of doing business, it will be held in large lots and can be put on the market to meet the demands of the trade But when each producer acts independently, in the matter of selling we are likely to have periods when the market will be surfeited and again other periods when there will be a scant supply. This state of affairs will often lead a producer to start to market with the belief that prices will be at a certain rate when he arrives there, but when he offers to buyers he may, and often does, find them much below, or sometimes above, his expectations

The prospect is that we will have a great increase in steamboating facilities during the coming year, and an improved and much more rapid method of putting produce in market. Nothing can encourage the steamboat men to strive and meet the demand for transportation so much as increased production We confidently look to the producing classes not to let slip so good a chance to enrich themselves as is now presented—a chance which, once lost, may not be presented again Nothing but stupidity can blind the eyes of men to the singularly advantageous position which the people of the Willamette now occupy in relation to the new gold mines, nothing but a determination never to improve our opportunities can prevent Oregon from becoming one of the wealthiest communities in the world.

ENGLISH NIMRODS —The Vancouver Island papers contain frequent notices of the hunting exploits of English Nimrods, newly arrived from the fast anchored isle It is a strange idiosyncrasy, but one common to all city bred Englishmen, that in order to be a gentleman it is necessary to be a sportsman A Cockney takes as naturally to inexpert shooting and grotesque horseback riding as he does to dropping his 'h's' or misplacing them In one case, our British cousins residing near Victoria, were treed by a bear and, notwithstanding they had rifles of the newest London make, remained perched on the branches of a tree all night, more like two grouse than two valiant Britons At another time two of them shot a deer and cut its throat after doing which they carried it about a mile and laid it down while they rested Suddenly the deer sprang to its feet and bounded away, to the utter astonishment of the two hunters Their explanation of the affair is said to have been intensely ludicrous The words 'blasted' and "bloody" were repeated as often as if they had slain a hecatomb of the timid rovers of the forest

MAN SHOT —A citizen of Jackson county says the Sentinel by the name of Reese was shot by a man supposed to be 'Dutch Henry" who is reputed to be crazy Reese lived on Butte creek, and saw a man driving off some horses belonging to neighbors of Reese and himself Reese told him who the horses belonged to, and the man told him he lied and at the same time raised his rifle and shot him on the spot, inflicting a wound supposed to be mortal Reese was a worthy man and had many friends

OLYMPIA, Jan 8 18

DEAR [illegible]

A ludicrous affair occurred to take place in our town last night in regard to the fair fame of Miss Kendall Esq editor of the Overland Press It will be remembered that about two weeks since a difficulty occurred between Mr Horace Howe and Mr Kendall in which the former received a serious wound from a pistol shot in the hands of the latter which was at first supposed to be mortal fortunately ignorance of firearms on Mr Howe's part prevented the ball from penetrating the vitals of his opponent Mr Howe has since been confined to his room but is now convalescent Since the time this affair occurred the sons and daughters of Mr Kendall have been in constant attendance upon their father and all unpleasant remembrances of the past appeared to be buried in oblivion Last night Mr Howe's young man Jim informed Miss Kendall that Mr Howe desired to see her on business Miss Kendall immediately complied with the request and on entering the room found Mr Howe in company with Mr Kendall and Mr Howe's young man Jim The subject of the difficulty between the latter and his father and all unpleasant reminiscences were withdrawn from the conversation and that further difficulties would cease between the parties as it was the father's recovery was considered almost certain and until such time the settlement of the matter of law would be delayed and it is hoped that the whole affair would be peaceably settled between the parties The facts of the said occurrence to day as I learn them are about these Young Mr Howe and Mr Kendall were in the back room of the store of Mr Kendall alone and engaged in conversation, the subject of which is not known but supposed to be concerning the late difficulty, a young man was waiting on Mr Kendall's office heard the report of a pistol, after which Mr Howe immediately came out of the back room passed through the office and out on the side walk having in his hands two Derringer pistols and remarking that he would give him a fight to Mr Kendall reached the door of his office and placed over the region of his heart, and exclaimed I am shot I fell forward upon the office floor and immediately expired

These are the particulars that I have been able to learn and I suppose are principally all that will be elicited as there were no witnesses to the shooting, for the position of the parties when it occurred save the presence of a young man, Mr Chittenden in the adjoining room

A coroner's inquest is now being held over the body The ball must have passed through the heart as it entered a little below the left nipple Young Howe is under arrest and will have an examination this evening

In matters of legislation both the House and Council have been at work during the week with an apparent determination to do something whether it be right or wrong — About forty bills have been introduced in the House and perhaps two thirds that number in the Council Most of these bills, however, are of a local or special nature having reference to ferry, road ditch and mining privileges But some important bills have also been introduced and partially acted upon In the House, by Mr Reed a revenue bill and an apportionment bill by Mr Potter a bill relating to the practice and proceedings in Justices Court In the Council, by Mr Cochran, an act amending the charter of the Columbia Transportation Co also a large number of bills from the "Code" committee, re-enacting the laws now in force for the purpose of codifying and publishing in one volume

The Council has passed a joint resolution to go into the election of a Public Printer on Monday the 20th inst. The House no doubt will concur A big fight will doubtless be made over apportionment bill introduced by Mr Reed The basis of representation is taken from the vote cast at the last general election, and the bill as nearly as may be is conformable thereto with one exception Idaho county would be entitled to eight members according to her vote but is given seven only this, though perhaps a little unjust to Idaho county, is done through conciliatory motives in view of the alleged fact that many of the voters of Idaho at the late election were actually residents of some of the lower counties The Sound counties have had this advantage given them There seems however a determination on the part of some of the members from the Sound district, to permit no apportionment Act to pass at the present session and should they carry their point it will operate very unjustly upon the great majority of the people of this Territory To say that the people of our Territory east of the mountains shall not be represented in our legislative councils in a ratio compatible with law and justice is to exhibit to the world a spirit of selfish unfairness, inconsistent with the duty and solemn oath taken by every honest legislator We hope such petty prejudices and jealousies will be thrown aside and honesty and fair dealing be had in the matter The members east of the mountains ask for nothing more than simple justice this they have a right to demand ORIHELS

JUPITER HAIT.—We learn that it is the intention to establish a house of musical entertainment in this city, on the 'pretty waiter gal" system Some people may think that such a place will not be conducive to good morals and public order We candidly confess that such at one time was our own view of the case; but since the pre eminent success of the Roman Chariot Races, we have found that we are not quite up to the standard of public opinion. The pretty waiter gal system is one that is sanctioned by the most ancient history now extant Indeed it took its rise in a period now called fabulous, but which we for the sake of our argument, will consider authentic. To be more explicit we mean at the time when the Immortal Gods used to get on a terrific horst on Mount Olympus, with Jupiter at the head of the table, and the nectar—vulgarly, mint julep—flowing in rivers. At that time, we are informed Jupiter was served at the banquet by a pretty waiter gal whose name was Hebe Doubtless, each one of their sub godships had a pretty waiter gal, for "like master like man" is a proverb, and all proverbs are true, of course. But on this point history is unfortunately dark. But with the example of Jupiter alone we need not be afraid of going wrong. Those, who are of a philosophical turn of mind, will find no difficulty in instituting a comparison between a leading citizen and Jupiter, when both are burdened down with cares of business or of state Certainly the cloude-compelling Jove could not look more charged with great ideas, his nod was not more terrible, nor were his edicts more implicitly obeyed. But Jove was not always hurling thunder-bolts or shaking his ambrosial curls to stamp the fate of men or nations No more can a leading citizen be always on eager-getting views intent He must occasionally relax, and what place so fit as Jupiter Hall—where the music of Apollo's lyre is drowned by nigger minstrelsy where pretty waiter gals—nicer than Hebe—dispense the delectables, which are sweeter than nectar To claim the idea of originating this classico Aryigico-historical argument in favor of pretty waiter galism, and shall ask no further reward—if it succeeds—than to be deified at pleasure to all eternity at Jupiter Hall.

WHAT DID HE MEAN?—Our ever present friend Josh. Muggins and ourself were walking up Third street yesterday. When we arrived at the corner just above the M. E Church, Josh. turned suddenly around, and looking diagonally, to the left, down the street, puffed his unlighted cigar vigorously, shutting one eye, as he is wont to do, the while Suddenly says he, "This street is lower than Washington." "Oh, no," says we, "it is higher than Washington, as you can plainly see." "It was higher," says Josh, while a fine flush of virtuous indignation mantled his handsome countenance "it was higher, my boy, it was higher; but now, alas! it is below the grade." "Below the grade," we replied, "how can you make that out?" The answer of the virtuous Muggins will never fade from our memory. "Because," remarks this new moral light, "it is de-graded." While we were trying what he could mean by the expression, he took our cigar to light his own. So deeply was he absorbed in thinking of some thing which he did not explain, that he forgot the end of the lighted cigar to his nose; tears came into his eyes, and an expression of deep sorrow came over his face "Don't weep, Josh," said we, "the street will be raised to the proper grade." "Grade be—ssed," bursted out Josh, "it is not the grade. I've burnt my nose with this blasted cigar," and he threw our cigar in a neighboring mud hole. We walked on; he rubbing his burnt nose, and we studying ways and means if to make him come out with another quip.

DOMESTIC VISIT.—Charles Lawrence visited the house of Matilda Collins, on Second street, night before last, and raised a row with the inmates. In the language of the complaint of said Matilda Collins, "he used loud, swearing, insulting and indecent language and conducted himself in a violent, riotous and boisterous manner." So far did he proceed with this bad conduct that Matilda was compelled to display a pistol in self defence, which, fortunately, she did not have to use Charles having been ejected from the house, began to throw stones at it; but this last of course was only circumstantially proved — Anyhow, the Recorder thought he had acted bad enough to be fined $25 and costs, or go 10 days to the city jail.

INQUEST.—The inquest on the body of the dead man, mentioned in yesterday's issue of this paper, did not develope any proof of his identity. He was dressed in blue blouse and pants.

SNOW.—On the night of the 21 inst., says the Mountaineer, snow fell at the crossing of John Day River to the depth of 18 inches The following day the temperature was mild, and at last accounts the snow was melting rapidly.

Real estate at Dalles is rapidly advancing in value.

The negro who was shot at Dalles on New Year's eve, has since died No arrest has been made.

MISCARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.—Since the organization of Jackson county in 1853 one hundred and eighty-eight marriages have been contracted. During the last year there have been six divorces granted, and more suits are pending. At this rate, in nine years there will have been fifty-four divorces—fifty four out of one hundred against the purity of society.

A Lesson From the Cornfield.

"I want to know what's the use of studying Latin?" said a boy, yawning, as he threw his book upon the window-seat.

If the truth were told, not much Latin had been studied that hour; he had been watching the sunset, stirring the fire, letting Carlo in and puss out of the door, and doing whatever he could find an excuse for doing, while pretending to study his conjugation.

"I can be as smart a man as I want to be, without all this, I know!"

"And what's the use of sewing for ever, too, I wonder," echoed his sister from the window-seat, "when one knows how? I don't see any sense in tasks; they're nothing but a plague!"

Just then entered Master Mark with an armful of wood; his face was discontented enough.

"Eternally something to do;" he murmured, as he threw the wood into its box with an emphasis; I should like to know what's the use of being kept at it, when father could afford to hire it done as easily as not?"

"Father sees the end from the beginning, Mark, and that's a happy thing for you," said a voice from the next room, where Ruth, elder sister and foster-mother to these discontented young folks, was bestirring herself about tea.

"I didn't know you were there," said Mark, by way of apology.

"Besides," continued Ruth, "he couldn't alter the case, if he would, very much; you are only fulfilling one of God's greatest laws in enduring all these trials."

Mark didn't pay much attention to this philosophy; he was out of humor because he couldn't please himself continually.—But, after tea and the evening frolic out of doors were over, Ruth announced, from the window that she thought she could give them a story, at which word they came romping into the sitting-room, cold, fresh, good-natured, and eager. A sharp contest for seats commenced, half in fun and half in selfishness, and when that was settled, the story began, thus:

At the latticed side of a well-stored corn-crib, lay a golden ear, covered with close-marshalled ranks of corn grains. The corn looked out upon the world, that is, upon the barn-yard, in lazy quietness, quite contented with its place in life—though, for that matter, it was of no present use to any one. One day the heap of grain felt a mighty disturbance in the neighborhood of the car in question; a general agitation prevailed; things began to slide from under it; evidently its long, idle, peaceful dream was at an end. With a multitude of fellow-ears it was thrown into a basket, carried to the kitchen, and there, forcibly, and painfully separated from the parent-stalk—shelled, the farmer's boy said, who did it; for what end, farmers only could know.

"Well-a-day!" exclaimed the kernels, as they lay buried in the basket. "This is another thing to life in the corn-crib, where we were a peaceful and united family.—What will happen next?"

Next the corn was carried to the field and carelessly cast into the damp earth, where it lay looking up at the sky and sun in amazement. Never had it been as low as this before; but there was no time for speech at this new phase of life, for suddenly the earth closed, the light disappeared, and the family of kernels lay buried.

"What can be the meaning of this?" exclaimed one. "Are we never to leave this dismal hole?"

"There's no telling. After all that's passed, I am prepared for almost anything."

"Change rules now-a-days," replied another, philosophically.

"We can't endure this long, however," responded a third; "We shall die! Oh, is it not hard to bear?"

"What a dreadful place! full of worms and noisome insects. Oh, we were well off in the corn-crib—what can be the use of all this?"

Meanwhile a change was passing upon them. All the elements of their bodies seemed dissolving, and if you had uncovered the hill the fifth or sixth day, you would have found the pretty shining grains all blackened and moldy, stained and swollen out of shape. "Ruined, you see," they said to one another; "ruined and lost! If we could have seen any use in it! Oh! if we could have staid in our corn-crib, then our life would have been happy.

But at length the mysterious change begins to hasten; their substance take a new shape; life appeared starting out of death. Yet not one of the complainants could tell what was happening, nor did they know, till, one morning, they found themselves again gazing into the sun—no longer bare grain. God had given them a new body, far superior to that which had fallen into the ground. Each looked on the other with admiration, and all looked into the vaulted blue sky rejoicing. Had they been a little taller, they would have seen a countless brotherhood of similar plants, holding up their glad heads above their moldy beds, which they counted their graves. "Truly, this is change," they all exclaimed, and waited to see what the end would be.

The days passed, warm and shining, and the nights cool and dewey, while each young plant shot up taller and taller, till at length they over-looked the whole broad farm, and over-topped the farmer's head, if he walked through the field, they now waved blossoms and silken tassels to each other, and gladly rustled their broad leaves in the wind.—The birds of the air perched, singing, on their swaying tops, and enormous pumpkin flowers looked up in envy from the ground far beneath.

"This is a delightful world, after all," said one tall plant, bestirring its long leaves.

"Yes, indeed," replied its brother; "when one has become prepared for it, and has grown tall enough to enjoy it."

"Life never seemed like this when we dwelt in the corn-crib," rustled a third.—"How much further we see, and how much more we enjoy"

"Yes; now we are living to some purpose, and on a large scale.

We have no reason to regret being buried. But who would have dreamed any good could have come of it?"

"Give the farmer the praise," said the wind, as it drove the cloud-shadows across the corn field, and God who so ordered your existence. As to yourselves, you would have shriveled and moldered in the corn-crib to this day, and would not have suffered one of the trials necessary to your present happy state."

The corn bowed beneath this deserved reproof, and in its heart blessed the sharp discipline of trial and the wise hand of the farmer who had enforced it.

"However," said Mark, when the tale was ended, "there's no such difference between men and children as there is between the seed and the grown corn; so your story hardly applies to us."

"Nearly as much, if we look at those who possess the greatest perfection of character. Yet men, even when they reach the highest state of earthly perfection, are far below what they will be, while the vegetable fulfills its whole destiny here.

Yet, think of the difference between little Harry, and John Milton, or Mark's favorite Walter Scott, and say if such children are more than mere seeds—grains which must fall to the ground and die if if they would bring forth fruit. Which would you rather, to lie at ease and shrivel into nothingness and insignificance, or grow, by means of trials and oppositions, to the full stature of men and women?"

Whether the children laid Ruth's story to heart and profited by it, or whether they continued their grumblings, I never could learn.

America the Granary of the World.

In his book of travels in the United States, recently published, Mr. Trollope says:

I was at Chicago and at Buffalo in October, 1861. I went down to the granaries, and climbed up into the elevators. I saw the wheat running in rivers from one vessel to another, and from railroad vans up into huge bins on the top stories of the warehouses; for there rivers of food run up hill as easily as they do down. I saw corn measured by the forty bushel measure with as much ease as we measure an ounce of cheese, and with greater rapidity. I ascertained that the work went on, week-day and Sunday, day and night incessantly; rivers of wheat and rivers of maize ever running. I saw men bathed in corn as they distributed it in its flow. I saw bins by the score, laden with wheat, in each of which bins there was space for a comfortable residence. I breathed the flour, I drank the flour, and felt myself to be enveloped in a world of of breadstuff. And then I believed, understood, and brought it home to myself as a fact, that here in the corn lands of Michigan, and amid the bluffs of Wisconsin, and on the high table lands of Minnesota, and the prairies of Illinois, had God prepared the food for the increasing millions of the Eastern World, as also for the coming millions of the Western. I began to know what it was for a country to overflow with milk and honey, to burst with its own fruits, and be smothered by it own riches. From St. Paul down the Mississippi, by the shores of Wisconsin and Iowa, by the ports on Lake Pepin, by La Crosse, from which one railway runs eastward, by Prairie du Chien, the terminus of a second, by Dunleith, Fulton, and Rock Island, from which three other lines run eastward, all through that wonderful State of Illinois—the farmer's glory—along the ports of the great Lakes, through Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, and further Pennsylvania, up to Buffalo, the great gate of the Western Ceres, the loud cry was this—"How shall we rid ourselves of our corn and wheat?" The result has been the passage of 60,000,000 bushels of breadstuffs through that gate in one year! Let those who are susceptible of statistics ponder that. For those who are not, I can only give this advice: Let them go to Buffalo next October and they can see for themselves.

Our Teeth.

They decay. Hence, unseemly mouths bad breath, imperfect mastication. Every body regrets it. What is the cause? I reply, want of cleanliness. A clean tooth never decays. The mouth is a warm place—98 degrees. Particles of meat between the teeth soon decompose. Gum and teeth must suffer.

Perfect cleanliness will preserve the teeth to old age. How shall it be secured? Use a quill pick, and rinse the mouth after eating. Brush and castile soap every morning; the brush and simple water on going to bed. Bestow this trifling care on your precious teeth and you will keep them and ruin the dentists. Neglect it, and you will be sorry all your lives. Children forget. Watch them. The first teeth determine the character of the second set. Give them equal care.

Sugar, acids, saleratus, and hot things are nothing when compared to food decomposing between the teeth. Mercurialization may loosen the the teeth, long use may wear them out, but keep them clean, and they will never decay. This advice is worth more than thousands of dollars to every boy and girl.

Books have been written on this subject. This brief article contains all that is essential.—Dr. Lewis.

FOR CHAPPED HANDS.—Wash the hands, and, without using the towel, apply a small quantity of honey and rub it in well. Use once a day, and it will make the hands very soft, and cure as well as prevent chapped hands. Apply it in the same manner to a cow's tents.—Country Gentleman.
